CO-FOUNDERS

ANITA EDGAR

MATTHEW KURIAN

Their paths crossed on one Sunday morning back in 1996, when the seeds of El Shaddai were sown.

Every child has the divine right to enjoy a childhood free of adult worries. A child must think of the next game and not the source of their next meal.

Over 20 years after Anita met Matthew and started the Charitable Trust with Victory House, the first children, they had an impact on the current Ambassadors of El Shaddai. Leading successful lives and contributing to society, they give us renewed desire to continue our work with children from underprivileged communities

Kavya's story of Hope

The Goa slums were Kavya's world, a tapestry woven with the harsh scent of fish and the constant struggle for survival. At 13, she shouldered the weight of being the eldest of four sisters, their flimsy hut offering little protection from a life determined to break them. Their father, a memory more than a presence, had left them to the mercy of a world where education was a cruel joke. One day, whispers of hope cut through the despair. Whispers of El Shaddai, a place where dreams, like fragile flowers, dared to bloom. It began with a simple meal, a brief respite in the relentless chase for sustenance. But in the kind eyes dispensing food, Kavya glimpsed something more – a spark that ignited a defiance deep within her. El Shaddai's outreach workers, angels in worn sandals, recognized the silent plea in Kavya's eyes. They saw beyond the grime and the hunger, a yearning for a different life. School, once a whispered fantasy, became a reality. The dust-caked streets gave way to classrooms, their minds thirsty for knowledge like parched earth craves rain. Today, Kavya's laughter rings through the safe haven of El Shaddai's care home, a melody replacing the hollow clang of begging bowls. Her mother, finally receiving the support she craved, watches with tear-filled eyes as Kavya runs free. Not to escape hunger, but towards a future brimming with possibilities. El Shaddai isn't just a charity; it's a bridge across the chasm of despair, a hand outstretched to say, "There's another way," and a gentle nudge that empowers young minds to dream again. By supporting El Shaddai, you become part of stories like Kavya's, where hope blooms amidst the most unlikely of places.

How can you help?

El Shaddai provides a spectrum of partnership opportunities, from sponsoring specific projects to engaging in our overarching mission. Our initiatives are structured to ensure transparency and adherence to CSR norms. We welcome your company to join us in this journey.

Here is our specially curated programs for your organization

We at El Shaddai strive towards making communities who are vulnerable and are not aware of the constitution and their rights including the rights of children. This program will give at least 1500 children in the slums and streets of Goa a chance to grow up healthy, educated, and safe - forever changing their life and future by providing shelter, food, education and protection.

In bustling cities like Panjim and Margao, forgotten faces wander the streets. El Shaddai's Manna program is their beacon of hope, offering a daily meal that nourishes more than just bodies. We reach out to the most vulnerable, the social outcasts with nowhere else to turn. For those who need more than a meal, El Shaddai provides safe havens – a chance to rebuild their lives. But we can't do it alone.

Education and health service will be provided for 1500 children who are living on the edge, marginalized, and deprived of basic education, health facilities, and with no financial security with education and comprehensive support services.

Your donation of food and supplies can sustain the programs, offering a lifeline to those in desperate need. Be a part of the solution. Donate today and help El Shaddai offer hope, not just hunger pangs.
